

Windows of Wonder - Paul

31st May 2011

I have been reading Daniel's book on unmasking God and have found it very interesting. At the moment I am encountering God in a very profound and intense way. I am not very good at putting it all into words except for the fact that I have found poetry! This is a poem I wrote after a very deep and real experience with God. It might be of some use for you to see how God is interacting with ordinary people in Ireland.....

From the darkness my lover came,
One to savour, One to blame.
His light impossible to tame,
My former truth lay in twain.

Alas I know not where I go,
But no heavy burden do I tow.
For this I shall my lover thank,
As all my fears have in him sank.

In darkest dark I found the light,
An angel's voice rang in the night.
And when I fell into its shine,
My heart rejoiced in loss of mine.
